Background

(HM Government, April 2016). This guidance sets out the obligations on all health, education and social care professionals who become aware of FGM or its possible/probable commission. FGM has 4 degrees of severity and has been classified as 'significant harm' for the purposes of the protection of children, by The Family Division of The High Court.

Questions to consider

Have the family makes preparations for the child to take a holiday, e.g. arranging vaccinations, planning an absence from school?

Is the child talking of a 'special ceremony' that is going to happen?

Why it matters

FGM is a procedure where the female genital organs are cut, removed, sutured closed, injured or changed and where there is no medical reason for this. It is a traumatic and violent act for the victim; performed in nonmedical settings, sometimes abroad, without aesthetic and may cause lasting physical and psychological harm.

FGM is illegal in the UK under the Female Genital Mutilation Act 2003, as well as a mandatory reporting duty requiring health, education and social care professionals to report known and suspected cases of FGM in under 18s to the Police.

It is a cultural, not a religious practice and pre-dates both Christianity and the Muslim faith. The reasons for still doing it are shrouded in myth and tradition, none which has any medical foundation.

If you fear a girl or woman is at risk of this procedure and may leave your presence/location ring the police on 999 or 101 immediately.

https://www.gov.uk/government/ publications/mandatoryreporting-of-female-genitalmutilation-procedural-information

The following are some signs that the child may be at risk of FGM:

A female child in a family where other females have undergone FGM.

The family is from a nation, region or community in which FGM is practised.

